Devils Lake (Not Specified) 1,448.8 msl

Stocking | Survey Report | Length Table | Length Chart

Walleye population continues to do well. Reproduction in recent years has generally been good and there are many fish less than 15 inches. The number of 15- to 20-inch walleyes is below average due to three consecutive year-classes that were relatively low from 2013 to 2015. There are still fish in this size range, but anglers will have to fish longer to catch them. The number of walleye longer than 20 inches is similar to the long-term average.

Northern pike will continue to provide good angler opportunities in 2020. Pike continue to reproduce naturally, are relatively abundant and can be found throughout the lake, particularly in the shallower areas. Most fish are between 24-30 inches, but trophy-sized pike are available. Pike are underutilized, so anglers should not be shy about keeping their limit.

The number of catchable-sized yellow perch is lower than last year. The number of perch from 8-12 inches is below the long-term average. The number of jumbos over 12 inches is also below average. The number of perch smaller than 8 inches is below average as well. Overall, there should be perch for anglers to pursue in 2020, but their numbers are below average.

White bass numbers are high. Most were hatched in 2015 and will likely be between 13-15 inches in 2020.

White bass numbers are low, but they tend to be good-sized.

Missouri River (Not Specified) 1,648.7 msl Stocking Survey Report Length Table Length Chart

Fishery downstream of Garrison Dam to the South Dakota border was greatly impacted following the flood of 2011. The Garrison Reach of the Missouri River upstream of Bismarck has been slow to recover and still suffers from depressed forage conditions. Walleye reproduction was good from 2014-16, so smaller walleye are present in good numbers and this fishery continues to provide opportunity for trophy-sized fish.

Garrison Dam Tailrace continues to maintain a diverse quality fishery, especially for walleye, brown trout, rainbow trout and salmon. Channel catfish are abundant and underutilized throughout the entire reach.

Walleye fishing was good in 2019 and should remain so in 2020. High forage abundance and good habitat conditions have allowed Sakakawea walleye to maintain good body condition, good growth rates and high abundance. Overall walleye abundance is the highest documented in the last 45 years due to several strong year-classes in recent years. Anglers will find excellent numbers of 15- to 20-inch fish in 2020, with good numbers of larger fish.

Northern pike abundance has declined from record highs the last couple years, but still remain exceptional. However, the population is maturing and average size is increasing. Pike exceeding 15 pounds will become more common in 2020 and the next few years.

The smallmouth bass population remains good and anglers will continue to encountered good numbers of fish. The population also contains good numbers of whopper-sized fish.

The Missouri River salmon fishery was greatly affected by high water in 2011 , but recovered and salmon fishing in 2016-17 was good, but somewhat slower in 2019. Fall spawning operations in 2019 found low numbers of fish in Sakakawea, but very high numbers in the Garrison Tailrace. Extremely high releases from the dam, and with the emergency spillway running well into fall 2019, resulted in very high entrainment of salmon and other fish thru Garrison Dam. It is unknown how this high entrainment will impact the Lake Sakakawea salmon fishery in 2020 and the next couple years.
